

A DEVOTEE, IT CAN AGE?

"Is anyone else experiencing stronger dev feelings as they get older?

When I was younger- high school, college age- it was all new... it had no name and I thought I was the only one. Dev feelings came and went. They always came back but were not always consistent.

As I get older I have noticed the dev feelings come more often, are stronger and last longer.

Anyone else experience this? Any ideas why?"

"For me, I think it's not so much that my tendencies are getting stronger as get older...I think my tendencies were stronger when I was younger simply because I didn't have any "outlet" so to speak - it was a bit difficult to find sites on the internet where I wouldn't feel guilty or horrible for feeling my feelings.

I find that my tendencies are stronger when I'm apart from my partner, physically, for long periods of time, and that the internet now doesn't really fill that need (not talking here of just sexual needs).

Therefore, my dev tendencies tend to lay low when my partner and I are together ... like there's no need that needs to get filled.

I know I tend to rattle on but I hope I made sense?"

"Faith, that sounds exactly like me. I had the same experience at high school and college age. The only thing I can add is that I had a fascination with disabled people that started before puberty. The sexual element kicked in a puberty. I found out what a devotee was when I was 26 or 27. It's been 10 years now!

Yes, as I get older, the feelings get stronger. I've never been with a wheeler, and I'm sure I never will, as I'm married to an AB guy. But it's to the point now where I can't have an orgasm unless I fantasize about paralyzed legs, etc. It makes me feel guilty, I don't want to fantasize about other things when we're having sex, but that's just the way it is, now."

"I can definitely relate to stronger dev feelings as I get older. I have wondered if it has to do with physiological age or if it's just knowing (and accepting) myself better. There is also the fact that I only discovered this site and the existence of other devs in adulthood which finally gave me the opportunity and venue to explore this part of myself.

I relate to what Isabelle said in that my dev feelings do subside when i actually have a wheeler in my life. It's like "all is well in my world" and i don't need to seek out additional stimuli."

My opinion: I can not even speak on this subject. I'm in great discovery on my side devotee, not that I only just beginning to feel these feelings, but I have just learned that I am not alone in the world. I am only now discovering the opinions of others, ask me ... So it will still wait a bit so I can tell you if a devotee knows grow old ...

Source: <http://paradevo.proboards.com/index.cgi?board=devs&action=display&thread=1153>