

A painting of a giant, dark-furred ape with a wide, toothy grin, standing in a large, domed hall. The ape is wearing a dark, long-sleeved shirt. In the foreground, a young boy in a yellow shirt is reaching out towards the ape. Several other children, dressed in blue uniforms, are standing around the base of the ape, looking up at it with expressions of awe and excitement. The hall has large, arched windows and pillars, creating a sense of grandeur.

A large rectangular area filled with a grid of small squares, resembling graph paper. The corners of the grid are rounded. The entire grid is enclosed within a dashed border. This area is intended for drawing a picture related to the text.

A large grid of graph paper with a dashed border and a vertical margin line on the left. The grid is 18 columns wide and 10 rows high. The first column is separated from the rest by a dashed line, serving as a margin. The remaining 17 columns are divided into a 5x5 grid of larger squares, with each of these squares further subdivided into a 4x4 grid of smaller squares.
